

FFWPU Europe and the Middle East: In Japan FamilyFed is Tomorrow's Temple

Knut Holdhus
August 18, 2026

The dissolution order reaching temples. Illustration: ChatGPT

Bitter Winter, the world's leading online magazine on religious liberty and human rights.

Buddhist priest Shindō Mizuta

Japan's religious double standard under scrutiny as Buddhist priest warns of dangerous precedent for all faiths set by today's dissolution of the Family Federation

Continued from Buddhist Priest Warns Japan 'Cult' Ban Risks All

Religion and politics: is there a double standard?

As pointed out by Dr. Massimo Introvigne in his Bitter Winter article 21st July, the question of political connections also concerns Buddhist priest Shindō Mizuta (水田真道).

See also Zen Head: "FFWPU Case A Warning to All Religions"

See also Mistrust of Religion: State Persecuting Minority

See also Large Zen Group: "Dangerous Precedent Set"

See also Japan: FFWPU Case Signals Dangerous State Power

The Family Federation has been criticized for its historical connections with politicians of Japan's Liberal Democratic Party. In a video conversation with literary critic Eitaro Ogawa (小川榮太郎), Mizuta does not deny that religious organizations and political actors can have relationships. Instead, he asks whether such relationships are being judged consistently.

He refers to an incident involving protest boats off the coast of Henoko in Nago City on the southern island of Okinawa, near a US military base. One of the boat captains was a pastor associated with the United Church of Christ in Japan, while another had previously been a candidate for the Japanese Communist Party.

For Mizuta, the question is therefore not whether religion and politics ever intersect. They plainly do. The question is whether such interaction is being treated as inherently problematic only when it involves a particular religious movement.

He worries that Buddhist priests themselves may sometimes repeat accusations against the Family Federation without sufficiently examining the principles underlying those accusations. In his view, religious leaders should be particularly careful about participating in collective condemnation.

What would dissolution mean for a Buddhist temple?

Perhaps the most powerful part of Mizuta's argument comes when he considers what would happen if the same kind of dissolution order were directed against Kongoji Temple, where he is chief priest.

A court-appointed liquidator could potentially take control of the temple's assets. These would not merely consist of abstract financial holdings. They could include the temple buildings, land, bank accounts, ritual clothing and ceremonial implements. Residents of the temple could potentially lose their homes.

This is particularly significant because Japanese temples are often simultaneously religious institutions and family residences. A dissolution could therefore affect not only the organization but also the priest and his family.

Mizuta explains that more than 80 percent of Kongoji's activities involve wakes and funerals conducted in the main hall. If the temple were prevented from operating normally, these religious services could no longer be performed. The priest could lose his position and become unable to carry out funerals for members of the surrounding community.

In other words, dissolution could effectively mean the destruction of the temple as a functioning religious institution.

This thought experiment is central to Mizuta's warning. The question is not whether Kongoji is currently threatened with dissolution. It is whether a legal mechanism capable of producing such consequences for one religious community could eventually be applied to another.

A modern "Purple Robe Incident"?

Mizuta compares the present controversy with the Purple Robe Incident of the Edo period, when the shogunate in 1627 intervened in disputes concerning religious authority and the appointment and recognition of Buddhist priests. Zen master Takuan Sōhō (沢庵 宗彭 - 1573 - 1645) and others opposed the government's interference.

Mizuta sees the present situation as a possible modern equivalent - a "Purple Robe Incident" today. He therefore asks why more religious leaders are not speaking out when the state intervenes so extensively in the affairs of another religious organization.

Ogawa shares this concern. He questions whether a dissolution process should have consequences extending into such fundamental religious activities as conducting funerals. He also argues that if historical conduct can be scrutinized selectively across long periods of time, authorities could theoretically find reasons to investigate almost any religious tradition.

Both men are also concerned about the role of the media. Ogawa describes what he calls "information magic": the ability of repeated reporting to amplify certain narratives while making other perspectives almost invisible. In particular, he argues that the voices of people who identify themselves as victims can receive extensive attention, while believers who remain committed to their religious community may receive much less.

A warning that goes beyond the Family Federation

The significance of Mizuta's intervention therefore lies less in defending every action of the Family Federation than in raising a constitutional and religious-liberty question: What limits should exist on state intervention in religious organizations?

For supporters of the Family Federation, the dissolution order is naturally experienced as a direct attack on their own religious community. Mizuta asks the broader question of what happens when the same principle is normalized.

A Buddhist temple, a Christian denomination, a new religious movement or another faith community may differ radically in theology and organization. Yet all depend upon some degree of protection from arbitrary state interference if freedom of religion is to have substantive meaning.

Mizuta and Ogawa ultimately appeal to religious leaders to look beyond denominational boundaries. Their argument is that solidarity should not depend on whether one approves of another religion. Precisely because religious communities differ, they need principles that protect them all.

From this perspective, the Family Federation case is not merely about the fate of one controversial religious organization. It is also a test of how far the Japanese state may go in determining which religious communities are entitled to exist as functioning institutions - and, consequently, of what religious freedom will mean in Japan in the future.

See also part 1: Buddhist Priest Warns Japan 'Cult' Ban Risks All

Text: Knut Holdhus, editor

Related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Lawfare: State Uses Legal System in War on Faith

More, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Scholar Questions Secrecy in Dissolution Case

And more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Shocked Author: "Japan Ignores Basics of Justice"

Still more, related to today Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Legal Inconsistencies A Blow to Democracy

Even more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Court Accused of Using Speculation

Also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: MEXT's Legal Spin and "Dissolution at All Costs"

Also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: UN Report: Japan's Lawfare Against Faith Minority

And also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Protesting No Transparency in Closed-Door Trial

More, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Dangerous Flaws in Dissolution Order Decried

Also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: "Lawyers Lying and Shaming Japan" for 50 Years

And also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Japan Following the Way of China

And also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Japan's Dissolution Case Echoes China's Playbook

More, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Media/Legal Expert: Communism Behind Persecution

And more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Militant Lawyers Dictate Government Policy

More, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Collusion to Rob Minority of Its Rights

And more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: State and Media Creating "Today's Non-Citizens"

Still more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Japan Copying China: State Seizure of Churches

And still more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: 12 Religious Freedom NGOs Denouncing Japan

More, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: 4300 Abductions and Forcible Detentions

And more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Japan: Families Fear for Graves of Loved Ones

Yet more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Lawyers Manipulating, Coercing, Lying

Also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Kishida Follows Anti-Family Federation Minister

Also related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Militant Lawyers Dictate Government Policy

Still more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Malicious One-Sided Government Source Selection

And still more, related to today Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Japan Urged to Make U-Turn

And yet more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Dangerous Precedent to Crush Religions

Even more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Japan Following the Way of China

Yet more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Japanese Communists' Final War

Still more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Political and Social Activism behind Oppression

Still more, related to today, Family Federation, tomorrow a temple: Dissolution Case: Rule of Law on Trial 4th March

When Children Are Taught To Suspect The Parents

August 17, 2026 • The News Desk

Share:

AI image

More Posts

“Even 20 Years If Needed”: Believers Vow To Endure

August 19, 2026

Today The Family Federation, Tomorrow A Temple?

August 18, 2026

Japan: FFWPU Case Signals Dangerous State Power

August 16, 2026

When Raising Children In Faith Turns Suspicious

August 15, 2026

Religious families become Japan's next battleground as purge moves into family life with schools turning children against their own parents

Continued from When Raising Children in Faith Turns Suspicious

Patricia Duval – Member of the Paris Bar Association, specializing in international human rights law. Has defended the rights of religious and faith minorities both in France and internationally. Screenshot from live transmission by UPF June 2025.

Logo of Bitter Winter, the world's leading online magazine on religious liberty and human rights.

In her article published by Bitter Winter 4th June 2026, international human-rights attorney Patricia Duval addresses school surveillance and coercive counseling as part of the orchestrated purge of believers belonging to the Family Federation – formerly called the Unification Church – throughout Japan.

A generation caught between home and school

Duval illustrates the Yoshiko Nishi speaking in Geneva 26th September 2025. Screenshot from live transmission by UPF, improved resolution by Grok xAI August 2026.

potential consequences of treating school children as

Liquidation Takes Psychological Toll On Members

August 14, 2026

No Proof Mother Han Linked To Political Funding

August 13, 2026

Yoon's Independence Put At Center Of Case

August 12, 2026

Search...

Categories

Send us a message

First Name *

Last Name

Email *

Email Address

Your Message *

Submit

potential victims of their parents' beliefs, by referring to testimony given to the United Nations in Geneva in September 2025 by Yoshiko Nishi, a second-generation Family Federation member.

More from Duval: Japan Breaking Faith of Children of Believers

More from Duval: Japan: Abusive State to Shape Children's Beliefs

More from Duval: Japan's Next Step: Indoctrination of Children

More from Duval: Beyond Dissolution: A Religious Purge in Japan?

More from Duval: Religious Freedom in Jeopardy After Dissolution

Nishi described the experience of her teenage son after he encountered media reports portraying the Family Federation as criminal and received information about the organization at school. According to her testimony, the boy eventually came to regard his own parents as members of a criminal organization. Yoshiko Nishi stated,

"One of the most painful moments of my life was with my fourteen-year-old son. One day, when he went to the dentist's office, he saw television reports branding our church as 'criminal.' He came home shaken. He asked me, 'Did we do something wrong?' I said no and tried to explain. But after constant exposure to hatred at school and in the media, he told me, 'If you don't abandon this church, I will cut all contact with you. You say you love us, but how can you put your children in such danger?' His fear was real. Fear of rejection. Fear of losing friends. Fear of being denied opportunities for education or work. My sweet son now lives with paranoia and shame, afraid of his own family. This campaign is not protecting society. It is destroying tens of thousands of lives and families by branding peaceful citizens as criminals."

For a parent, this represents a devastating reversal of the normal relationship between family and society.

Instead of the child receiving reassurance from parents when confronted with frightening information about their faith, the parents themselves become the source of suspicion. The child may fear that association with the family religion will lead to rejection by classmates, damage educational opportunities, or create difficulties in later employment.

The resulting psychological pressure can be enormous. A young person may feel forced to choose between loyalty to parents and acceptance by the surrounding society.

This is

The Family Federation places considerable emphasis on family relationships. Here, parents and children praying together before bed. Illustration: Microsoft Designer Image Creator, 5th November 2024.

particularly significant in Japan because the Family Federation places considerable emphasis on family relationships. Its members often regard marriage, parenthood, filial responsibility and the transmission of values between generations as central elements of religious life.

Consequently, policies that undermine trust between parents and children can have consequences extending far beyond the classroom.

From counseling to separation?

Duval's concerns become still more serious when she discusses proposals for temporary accommodation away from parents or other believers.

According to the material she cites, children considered to be experiencing difficulties connected with a religious environment could potentially be offered temporary living arrangements away from their parents, supposedly to provide an opportunity to "rebuild their lives".

For critics of the policy, this represents a fundamental shift. The question is no longer simply whether a school counselor is investigating a child's religious background. It becomes whether state-supported institutions can ultimately facilitate the physical separation of children from families because of concerns associated with their religious affiliation.

Such measures would be especially controversial where there is no independent evidence of abuse or neglect and where the principal concern is the family's religious identity.

The broader human-rights question

Duval therefore places the Japanese controversy within a much broader framework of freedom of conscience and religion.

The central issue, as she presents it, is not whether individual children should be protected when they genuinely experience abuse. Children obviously require such protection, regardless of their parents' religion.

The question is whether membership in a disfavored religious minority itself can become a reason for surveillance, psychological intervention, or disruption of family relationships.

For Family

Japanese parents with high-school-age daughters. Illustration: Microsoft Designer Image Creator, 5th November 2024.

Federation parents, this creates a profound dilemma. They may wish to raise their children according to their own beliefs, as religious parents in other communities routinely do. Yet if schools teach children to regard those beliefs with suspicion, ask them to disclose details about their religious upbringing, and encourage them to discuss their parents with school personnel, the parents' ability to transmit their faith is significantly weakened.

The danger, Duval argues, is that the Japanese response to the Family Federation's legal and political controversy could evolve into something broader than the dissolution of a religious organization. It could become a social and institutional purge in which the religion's presence is gradually marginalized from family life, education, and the next generation.

Her appeal is ultimately directed beyond Japan. She urges UN human-rights bodies to remind Japanese authorities that freedom of religion or belief, peaceful assembly, expression, privacy, and family life apply to unpopular and controversial religious minorities as well as to everyone else.

For the parents involved, the issue is intensely personal. It concerns whether they can continue to tell their children what they believe, worship together as a family, and pass their religious values to the next generation without their children being encouraged by public institutions to regard those very beliefs – and their parents' commitment to them – as evidence of something wrong.

See also part 1: When Raising Children in Faith Turns Suspicious

Text: Knut Holdhus, editor

Featured image above: Caught between home and school. Illustration: ChatGPT, August 2026.

Related to children taught to suspect the parents: Lawfare: State Uses Legal System in War on Faith

More, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Scholar Questions Secrecy in Dissolution Case

And more, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Shocked Author: "Japan Ignores Basics of Justice"

Still more, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Legal Inconsistencies A Blow to Democracy

Even more, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Court Accused of Using Speculation

Also related to children taught to suspect the parents: MEXT's Legal Spin and "Dissolution at All Costs"

Also related to children taught to suspect the parents: UN Report: Japan's Lawfare Against Faith Minority

And also related to children taught to suspect the parents: Protesting No Transparency in Closed-Door Trial

More, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Dangerous Flaws in Dissolution Order Decried

Also related to children taught to suspect the parents: "Lawyers Lying and Shaming Japan" for 50 Years

And also related to children taught to suspect the parents: Japan Following the Way of China

And also related to children taught to suspect the parents: Japan's Dissolution Case Echoes China's Playbook

More, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Media/Legal Expert: Communism Behind Persecution

And more, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Militant Lawyers Dictate Government Policy

More, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Collusion to Rob Minority of Its Rights

And more, related to children taught to suspect the parents: State and Media Creating "Today's Non-Citizens"

Still more, related to children taught to suspect the parents: Japan Copying China: State Seizure of Churches

And still more, related to children taught to suspect the parents: 12 Religious Freedom NGOs Denouncing Japan

More, related to taught to suspect their parents: 4300 Abductions and Forcible Detentions

And more, related to taught to suspect their parents: Japan: Families Fear for Graves of Loved Ones

Yet more, related to taught to suspect their parents: Lawyers Manipulating, Coercing, Lying

Also related to taught to suspect their parents: Kishida Follows Anti-Family Federation Minister

Also related to taught to suspect their parents: Militant Lawyers Dictate Government Policy

Still more, related to taught to suspect their parents: Malicious One-Sided Government Source Selection

And still more, related to taught to suspect their parents: Japan Urged to Make U-Turn

And yet more, related to taught to suspect their parents: Dangerous Precedent to Crush Religions

Even more, related to taught to suspect their parents: Japan Following the Way of China

Yet more, related to taught to suspect their parents:
Japanese Communists' Final War

Still more, related to taught to suspect their parents:
Political and Social Activism behind Oppression

Still more, related to taught to suspect their parents:
Dissolution Case: Rule of Law on Trial 4th March

« Previous
Japan: FFWPU Case Sign...Today The Family Feder... Next »

FAMILY FEDERATION
FOR WORLD PEACE AND UNIFICATION
EUROPE AND THE MIDDLE EAST

GET STARTED

Home

Privacy Policy

SUBSCRIBE TO OUR NEWSLETTER

First Name

Last Name

Your Email Address

☐ I consent to have this website store my submitted information so they can respond to my inquiry

Follow us

© All rights reserved FFWPU Europe & Middle East

This Website is GDPR Ready

